Economic inequality; concentration of wealth; regional disparities; unequal opportunities; informal employment; inclusive growth; redistribution; social justice

Model Answer

Introduction

Economic growth increases national income but does not automatically distribute its benefits equitably. Unequal opportunities can create prosperous enclaves alongside widespread deprivation.

Reasons for Unequal Distribution

- Concentration of wealth: Unequal ownership of land, capital and assets allows a minority to capture disproportionate gains.
- Regional disparities: Investment and infrastructure often concentrate in major cities, leaving remote regions behind.
- Unequal opportunities: Poor access to quality education, healthcare and digital services limits social mobility.
- Employment inequality: Capital-intensive growth may create fewer jobs, while informal workers face low wages and insecurity.
- Weak welfare delivery: Gaps in implementation prevent disadvantaged groups from accessing benefits.

Way Forward

Progressive taxation, quality public services, rural infrastructure, skill development, social security and support for small enterprises can distribute growth more fairly. Transparent implementation is essential.

Conclusion

Economic progress becomes meaningful when it improves living standards across society. Inclusive growth must combine wealth creation with equal opportunity, social justice and effective welfare delivery.
