Introduction

Indian civil services are expected to combine professional competence with commitment to the constitutional and national interest rather than partisan political interests.

1. Professionalism

Professionalism requires competence, impartiality, objectivity, efficiency, integrity and evidence-based decision-making. Civil servants must implement laws and policies without personal bias.

2. Nationalistic Consciousness

Nationalistic consciousness means commitment to India's sovereignty, unity, integrity, constitutional values and welfare of its citizens. It requires placing public interest above personal or sectional interests.

3. Their Complementarity

Professionalism provides the means through which national objectives are achieved, while national commitment provides purpose and direction. For example, disaster management requires technical competence as well as an unwavering commitment to protect citizens.

4. Constitutional Dimension

The ideal civil servant remains politically neutral while being firmly committed to constitutional democracy and social justice.

Conclusion

The Indian civil service ethos therefore represents competent administration guided by integrity, constitutional values and an inclusive conception of national interest.
