Preventive diplomacy; peaceful dispute settlement; UN Charter; Article 19(1)(b); reasonable restrictions; public order; proportionality; police accountability; democratic participation

Model Answer

Introduction

Diplomacy and democratic participation are essential instruments for maintaining peace. International negotiations can reduce conflict, while peaceful public assemblies enable citizens to express political views and hold governments accountable.

Role of Diplomatic Engagement

Conflict Prevention: Direct communication and negotiation can reduce misunderstandings and create conditions for dialogue.

Peaceful Settlement: Diplomatic frameworks can facilitate ceasefires, confidence-building measures and agreements consistent with international law.

Challenges: Conflicting strategic interests, mistrust and domestic political pressures can obstruct negotiations.

Balancing Security and Assembly Rights

Constitutional Protection: Article 19(1)(b) guarantees peaceful assembly without arms, subject to reasonable restrictions under Article 19(3).

Proportionate Security: Police deployment, traffic management and barricading may protect participants and the public. Restrictions should be lawful, necessary and proportionate to identified risks.

Accountability: Authorities should communicate restrictions clearly, facilitate lawful demonstrations and provide remedies against arbitrary action.

Way Forward

Institutionalised diplomatic channels should be combined with confidence-building measures. Domestically, advance coordination between organisers and police can improve safety without unnecessarily restricting democratic freedoms.

Conclusion

Dialogue remains central to both international peace and domestic democracy. Security measures are most effective when they protect public order while respecting constitutional rights and legal accountability.
