Answer Hint

Discuss LWE's socio-economic roots, security measures, tribal rights, governance deficits, infrastructure, rehabilitation and participatory development. Highlight Bastar's transformation while emphasising sustainable peace, constitutional safeguards and inclusive growth.

Model Answer

Left-Wing Extremism (LWE), rooted in Maoist ideology, has historically exploited governance deficits, socio-economic deprivation and alienation in tribal regions. Bastar in Chhattisgarh emerged as a major centre of Maoist insurgency.

The transformation of Bastar demonstrates the importance of combining security operations with development-oriented governance. Improved road connectivity, telecommunications, education, healthcare and employment opportunities can strengthen state presence and reduce extremist influence. Security initiatives, intelligence coordination and rehabilitation of surrendered cadres further support peace.

However, sustainable peace requires protecting tribal rights, customary institutions and livelihoods. Implementation of the Forest Rights Act, 2006, and the Panchayats (Extension to Scheduled Areas) Act, 1996, is crucial for ensuring community participation and addressing historical injustices.

Celebrating Diwali with security personnel in Bastar symbolises recognition of their sacrifices and the region's changing security environment. Nevertheless, success should be measured not merely through declining violence but through improved human development, democratic participation and public trust.

Thus, an integrated approach combining security, constitutional safeguards, accountable administration and inclusive development is essential for lasting peace and national integration.
