Model Answer

India and Nepal share deep historical, cultural, geographical and economic ties. Their development partnership has increasingly expanded into infrastructure, energy, technology and social-sector cooperation.

The Viksit Bharat–Samunnat Nepal Joint Vision seeks to provide a broader framework for this relationship through ten pillars.

Its major significance includes:

1. Economic integration: Cooperation in trade, investment and development can strengthen cross-border economic opportunities.

2. Connectivity: Improved transport and infrastructure linkages can facilitate trade, tourism and movement of people.

3. Energy security: Hydropower cooperation can support Nepal's development while contributing to India's clean energy requirements.

4. Technology and innovation: Collaboration in space, education and innovation can promote knowledge-sharing and capacity-building.

5. Human development: Cooperation in health, agriculture, sports and culture can deepen people-to-people relations.

6. Implementation accountability: Six-monthly monitoring can help assess progress and address delays in development projects.

The partnership must also address challenges such as project implementation delays, trade imbalances, border-related concerns and differences in strategic perceptions.

Conclusion

A development-oriented and mutually beneficial partnership can strengthen India–Nepal relations. Consistent implementation, mutual respect and regular institutional dialogue are essential to translating the joint vision into tangible outcomes.
