Model Answer

Introduction

Civil unrest in multicultural societies often reflects a combination of immediate triggers and deeper social, economic and institutional challenges. Addressing unrest requires both effective law enforcement and long-term inclusion.

Factors Contributing to Unrest

1. Socioeconomic inequality: Unequal access to education, employment and housing can deepen marginalisation.
2. Discrimination: Perceived unequal treatment may weaken trust in public institutions.
3. Policing concerns: Allegations of excessive force or lack of accountability can intensify public anger.
4. Political polarisation: Oversimplified narratives about migration or identity may aggravate social divisions.

Measures for Governments

- Accountable policing: Ensure transparent investigations, proportional use of force and independent oversight.
- Inclusive development: Expand education, skill development, employment and access to essential services.
- Community engagement: Strengthen dialogue between local authorities and diverse communities.
- Responsible communication: Counter misinformation and avoid stereotyping entire groups.
- Rule of law: Address violence and property destruction through lawful, fair procedures while safeguarding peaceful protest.

Conclusion

Sustainable peace requires combining public safety with equality, institutional accountability and social inclusion. Neither indiscriminate blame nor coercive measures alone can resolve deep-rooted social tensions.
